

Art And Family Values

Wrestling The Demon

By ANNE HEDRICK
Art Commissioner

The Vermont Commission on the Status of the Family is pleased to announce the exhibition of "Wrestling The Demon" by Anne Hedrick, a painting that depicts a man wrestling a demon. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority.

The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority.

The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority.

"Wrestling The Demon" by Anne Hedrick. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority.

Some of the values and values that are being challenged in our society are: family, community, and the environment. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority.

The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority. The painting is a metaphor for the struggle of family values in a society where the values of the majority are being challenged by the values of a minority.